Where you stand as 1984 opens

You are nine years into a long sixteen-year chapter ruled by Jupiter, which began in September 1973 and runs until September 1989. Underneath it, a gentler current: the natural season of life called the Venus phase, which has held you since mid-1970 and continues until mid-1990 — the householder's season, when beauty, partnership, comfort and the pleasures of ordinary life are meant to be lived rather than postponed. So the backdrop of these years is sweet, even when the foreground asks for effort.

Right now, within Jupiter's long chapter, you are in the final weeks of a Venus sub-period that began in July 1981 and closes on 16 March 1984.

Until 16 March 1984 — the Venus sub-period closes

Phaladīpikā is generous about exactly this window. It speaks of fine garments and ornaments, of vehicles and comforts, of happiness in the company of those you love, of personal radiance, and of gains that arrive through people in authority or through official channels. That is the signature of these last weeks: whatever has been building in the realm of relationship, beauty, agreements and material ease is ripe now and wants to be concluded, signed, enjoyed, or formally settled.

Practically: if there is a purchase, an agreement, a reconciliation, or a piece of recognition waiting at the edge of your life, the first ten weeks of 1984 are its natural harvest time. Venus here also rules your rising sign, so this is not merely about things — it is about you being seen well.

The long chapter: Jupiter's great period, 1973 to 1989

It is worth understanding the whole chapter you are inside, because it explains the texture of these years. Your Jupiter sits in the twelfth house, in Virgo, and carries the lordship of the third and sixth houses. The classical books are frank about this combination: Sārāvalī and Uttara Kālāmṛta both say a period ruled by the lord of the sixth is a period of exertion — effort, friction, obstacles met and worked through, and a need to guard health. Parāśara adds the counsel to care for the body and not to be unsettled by opposition.

But the same books give you a real protection, and I want you to hold it. Sārāvalī says that when the Jupiter ruling the period is retrograde — as yours is — the period wearies people, yes, and taxes one's possessions, but it specifically does not bring calamity, and it does not bring enmity from adversaries. That is an unusually precise reassurance: tiredness, yes; disaster and enemies, no.

And Jātaka Pārijāta adds that Jupiter, in its own period, gives the good results of the house it occupies. Your Jupiter occupies the twelfth — the house of retreat, of distant places, of study, of charity, of rest and of the inner life. So the genuine fruit of this whole chapter is interior: what you learn quietly, what you give away, where you travel, how deep you go. These years do not make noise. They make depth.

A simple practical note that the texts raise and I pass on plainly, without alarm: during a sixth-lord period, be sensible about the body — ordinary care with sharp tools, machinery, travel and small injuries, and don't let a minor ailment go untreated. This is housekeeping, not prophecy.

The sky right now: Saturn in the ninth from your Moon

Saturn is presently moving through Libra — the sign that was rising at your birth, and the ninth from your Aquarius Moon. The ninth is the house of fortune, of teachers and elders, of pilgrimage and of principled effort.

By the finer measure of the aṣṭakavarga, which counts how much support a planet actually finds in the sign it occupies, Saturn is thinly supported here, and the sign as a whole is carrying less than its average stock of strength. In plain terms: this is a transit that asks more than it gives for the moment. Energy goes out; returns are slow. The one mercy is that Saturn is currently crossing the segment of this sign belonging to Mercury, which is a favourable segment — so there is a thread of relief running through it, usually arriving through conversation, paperwork, correspondence, commerce and clear-headed negotiation. Use words and documents as your tools this year; they are working for you even when circumstance is not.

The tradition gathers several cautions around Saturn's passage through the ninth from the Moon, and read constructively they say one coherent thing: tend what is behind you. Parāśara's verses on this transit speak of the family line — of mothers and of forebears, of making peace where there is unease among elders, of honouring those who have gone before. Take that as an invitation rather than a warning: a visit, a reconciliation, a remembrance rite, a letter written to someone in the older generation. The ninth is the house of ancestry, and Saturn there asks that it be kept clean.

A second caution, from the same body of text, concerns the household and its goods: where Saturn meets the shadow-points in transit, the books speak of fire in the house, of money slipping away through careless or unscrupulous hands, and of entanglement in formalities. Read it as prudent counsel for 1984 — check the wiring and the locks, keep your papers and accounts in order, be deliberate about whom you lend to and whom you sign with, and settle anything official rather than letting it drift. Done early, these become small chores. Left late, they become the story.

And the bright verse, from Jātaka Pārijāta: the ninth is also called the place of penance, and Saturn's gaze upon it is counted among the makings of a person of standing. Disciplined, unglamorous, principled effort during this passage is precisely what builds authority later. The same text reminds us — in its characteristic way, by listing whole configurations rather than single transits — that no transit acts alone; courage, partnership, selfhood and fortune are always weighing on one another. So weigh this season against everything else in your life, and do not give it more power than it has.

On Sade Sati, plainly: it is not running now. Your Saturn's seven-and-a-half-year passage around your Aquarius Moon does not begin until roughly March 1990 — well beyond this forecast. Whatever this year asks of you, it is not that.

The sky right now: Jupiter in the eleventh from your Moon

Jupiter is in Sagittarius, the eleventh from your Moon — the house of gains, networks, elder siblings and fulfilled wishes. Here the aṣṭakavarga is emphatically encouraging: Jupiter is strongly supported in this sign, and the sign itself is carrying well above the ordinary stock of strength. This is a genuinely fruitful transit and it lasts through 1984.

One honest qualification: at this exact moment Jupiter is passing through the segment of the sign belonging to Saturn, which is barren — no yield from that stretch. So the first part of 1984 feels slower than it is. The fruit is on the tree; the picking comes a little later in the year as Jupiter moves on through the richer segments. Patience now is not resignation; it is timing.

16 March 1984 to 2 January 1985 — the Sun sub-period

The Sun takes over the sub-period in March. In your chart the Sun sits in the eighth house in Taurus and rules the eleventh — gains and income. The eighth is the house of depths: research, inherited and shared resources, things that must be investigated rather than displayed, matters that mature out of sight.

So expect income and opportunity in these months to arrive through less visible channels than usual — through other people's resources, through a settlement or a legacy-like arrangement, through specialist or behind-the-scenes work — rather than through open, public acclaim. The classical books keep their fuller verses about your Sun, both the cautionary and the splendid, for its own great period decades ahead; in a sub-period such as this they touch lightly. Treat this stretch as a quiet, investigative nine months. Guard your health and your eyes, keep ordinary routines, and do not force visibility that the season isn't offering.

Around December 1984 — Saturn enters Scorpio

This is the first of the big sky-shifts. Saturn leaves Libra and enters Scorpio, which is the tenth from your Moon — the house of career, duty and public standing.

Saturn in the tenth is the classic season of responsibility. Workload rises; so does accountability. It is not a season of ease, but it is the season in which reputations are actually built, because Saturn only gives what has been earned and only keeps what has been built well. Expect more to be asked of you professionally from late 1984 onward, and expect that what you accept then will still be standing years later. Say yes carefully, and then do the work thoroughly.

Around January 1985 — Jupiter enters Capricorn

A month later, Jupiter leaves the fruitful eleventh and enters Capricorn, the twelfth from your Moon — the house of expenditure, retreat and the spirit. Note how neatly this rhymes with your birth chart, where Jupiter itself sits in the twelfth: for this year, the sky repeats what your chart already says.

Read it as a year that turns inward. Money moves outward more freely — toward travel, education, treatment, charity, or distant commitments — and the real returns are not financial. This is the year for study, for retreat, for pilgrimage or foreign ground, for spiritual practice, for closing accounts of every kind. Combined with Saturn's demand on your career, 1985 asks you to carry outer duty and inner quiet at the same time. That is a demanding but genuinely formative combination; people are often remade by such a year.

2 January 1985 to 4 May 1986 — the Moon sub-period

The Moon rules your tenth house of profession and sits in your fifth house of heart, creativity, learning and children. So within that demanding sky, your work flows best through the heart — through creative output, through teaching or guiding, through what you genuinely enjoy — rather than through grinding alone.

This is also a sub-period that favours the domestic and emotional side of life: home, mother, the people you nourish and are nourished by. If the outer world is asking a great deal in 1985, let this be your instruction — restore yourself at home and in creative work, and let the career demand be met from a full cup rather than an empty one.

Around January 1986 — Jupiter enters Aquarius

The second great relief of this forecast. Jupiter moves into Aquarius — your own Moon sign, the first from the Moon — where it concerns the self and the body directly.

After the inward, outgoing year of 1985, Jupiter over your Moon turns the lights back on: health and vitality improve, your own person comes back into focus, and the inner work of the previous year begins to show on the outside. From early 1986 you are once again a presence in your own life rather than a servant of its obligations. This is the natural point at which to begin something you want your name on.

4 May 1986 to 9 April 1987 — the Mars sub-period

The last chapter in our three-year horizon. Your Mars sits in the sixth house in Pisces, a friend's sign, and rules the second house of family wealth and speech and the seventh of partnership.

Mars in the sixth is the fighter's placement — strong for competition, for clearing obstacles, for health regimens, for service, for simply outlasting difficulty. Expect this year to have more drive and more friction in it than the two before: contests you can win, disputes best handled briskly and fairly, and real progress on anything that has been stuck. Because Mars also governs your finances and your partnerships, money matters and close agreements will want attention and firmness — and because he rules speech, keep your words measured when the pace rises. The texts reserve their fullest statements about your Mars for its own great period far ahead; here you get its working edge, which is useful.

Holding it all together

Three years, then, with a clear shape: a sweet, concluding Venus window until March 1984; a quiet, investigative stretch to the start of 1985; a demanding and formative 1985 in which responsibility and retreat arrive together; a restoration beginning in early 1986; and a year of healthy, competitive forward motion to spring 1987. Beneath it all, Jupiter's long chapter runs until September 1989 — a wearying chapter, the books say honestly, but one explicitly protected from calamity and from enemies, and one whose true harvest is interior.

Please hear all of this as timing, not verdict. A daśā does not decide what happens; it tells you when a theme ripens and becomes workable. The cautions I have passed on — care of the body, care of the household and its papers, care of the elders and those who came before — are not predictions of loss. They are the small, dignified tasks this particular season rewards. Do them early, work with the grain of each chapter rather than against it, and these three years will leave you steadier, deeper and better established than they found you.
